

Most Pressing Military Issues (MPMI) (May 2007)

The JROC approved the following list of most pressing military issues as a tool to facilitate the review and focus of those issues that come before the JROC. The MPMI does not supersede or replace other existing Departmental priorities or processes, but the JROC recognizes that the MPMI may be of value to other Departmental efforts. The JROC will review and adjust this list periodically.

- Collect and fuse multi-source sensor data increasing situational understanding
- Provide persistent surveillance in ungoverned/denied areas
- Improve interagency coordination and planning to develop shaping strategies to assist nations at strategic crossroads
- Improve information sharing to support operational forces and mission partners by providing adequate bandwidth and information sharing tools
- Improve joint force management
- Improve joint force projection and joint force sustainment
- Increase and improve irregular warfare capacity in conventional forces (language, cultural, behavioral) and ability to model irregular challenges
- Improve the ability to defeat improvised explosive devices (IED), mines and other buried objects
- Affordability of required capabilities
- Enable joint forces to operate in a protected net-centric environment
- Review and recapitalize joint force capabilities to maintain dominance across the full range of military operations
